Originally published in 1982, "Easy Lessons in Sm'algyax" was written, compiled and edited by oen of our first language warriors, Russell Haywayrd of the Ganhada (Raven Clan). He was an influential figure in Metlakatla, Alaska and his efforts to preserve and perpetuate out language is a constant source of inspiration.

For the 35th anniversary of it's original publication, with the help of Goodm Nluułgm Xsgiik, Mrs. Sarah Booth, The Haayk Foundation transcribed the original content into the modern orthography and updated Russell's work, with the blessing of his daughter, Carol Hayward.

About The Haayk Foundation

The Haayk Foundation is a nonprofit organization located in Metlakatla, Alaska, whose primary goal is to save Sm'algyax, the endangered language of the Tsimshian people.

Full of everyday phrases, vocabulary, songs, poems and adaawg (true tellings), Russell's work contines to fuel our efforts to save our beautiful language. Following in the footsteps of great language warriors like Russell, we hope to carry on their legacy by saving our language and providing learning materials for all of our people.

Raven and the Moon

A Tsimshian Legend

A legend told to Russell Hayward by his grandmother.

Txaamsm was a legendary figure of the Tsimshians that performed magic and got the starring role in many humorous stories but at many times was the savior of the Tsimshians. Stories about Txaamsm have been handed down from generation to generation.

Txaamsm had the power given by high heaven to change himself into any form, from human being to any animal, bird or plant. The story covers how the Tsimshian's great Txaamsm created the moon and make it circle the earth.

The Tsimshians and all the peoples of the earth could not walk the beaches to gather food because the tide would not go down. After a great search over half of the world, Txaamsm found out who was holding up the tide. It was little old lady. A mean old hag that wouldn't let the people gather seafood by keep the tide way up.

Txaamsm set himself upon a mission to accomplish one thing: Find out how this little lady kept the tide up.

Now this little old lady had a pretty daughter. They called her Moonmaid and she was as beautiful as a princess.

Txaamsm changed himself into a raven, flew around until he found out where the princess went to drink water. She would come to a stream, fold a leaf of w'nag (skunk cabbage) and use it to dip water and drink. Txaamsm got a bright idea. He changed himself into a hemlock needle and dropped himself into the w'nag dipper. The princess, being real thirsty, drank all the water, including Txaamsm as a tree needle.

Many, many suns went by (remember there was no moon yet) and the princess had a baby. He was husky, ten pound baby boy. Now, Txaamsm as a baby was aware of everything. The little old lady celebrated by lowering the tide and the baby Txaamsm noticed that she used a carefully guarded treasure. It was a bright ball and the box was normally open, which pulled the tide up. When the little old lady slowly shut the box the tide would go down, but pulled it right back up again.

One day they ran out of wood and the little old lady tried to have the princess get some wood but she wouldn't. She used a lot of excuses not to go. Finally, the old lady said she would go, so she got ready and took off.

This was what Txaamsm was waiting for. He started crying for the bright ball. Moonmaid said, "NO, NO, NO! It is ha'wałg!" (forbidden). But the boy kept crying and crying real loud until the princess gave up. She got the box and let the bright ball roll on the floor.

Txaamsm was happy and laughed for the first time, rolling the ball around and around. When the princess turned away for a minute, Txaamsm suddenly turned himself back into a large raven, picked up the bright ball and flew out the window with it. The raven judged correctly how high to take the bright ball before releasing it. The ball has orbited around the world perfectly since, giving us high and low tides. Remember that next time you gather abalone that Txaamsm set the moon to give us high and low tides.

Sabaa wila waals Txaamsm dił gyemgm aatk. (End of Txaamsm and the Moon)
